

Help us do something about
Watchtower's most damaging policies...

- Shunning of former believers
- Mishandling of child abuse
- Mishandling of domestic abuse
- Stigmatization of higher education
- Ban on certain blood treatments

The world must know about these harmful policies before we can begin to think about seeing an end to them.

Advocates for Awareness of Watchtower Abuses

We are watching.

We are speaking.

We are doing.

A worthy cause

Throughout history there have been bullies. Bullies are those who put their own interests first, and inflict harm on others. Bullies prosper and flourish in an environment where they can inflict misery on their victims unopposed. Many who leave Jehovah's Witnesses quickly identify the Watch Tower Society as an organization that manifests these qualities. Watchtower imposes mental and emotional abuse on any who choose to leave of their own free will through its cruel shunning policy, which tears families apart. AAWA believes that such damaging practices must not be allowed to continue. AAWA's volunteers are those who dare to say, "enough is enough" by working to raise public awareness of the damage Watchtower is inflicting on people's lives.

A Mission Statement that works

One of the things that makes AAWA so unique is its Mission Statement, which was drafted after careful thought and deliberation by AAWA's founders over many weeks. It defines precisely which of Watchtower's beliefs and practices are most damaging, and articulates the manner in which AAWA goes about its work of raising awareness. In particular, many of our volunteers and supporters have expressed approval of AAWA's religiously neutral stance. This approach means that AAWA's time and resources are not used in furtherance of any religious or philosophical viewpoint or agenda. AAWA is only interested in highlighting Watchtower's most damaging policies and helping Witnesses escape the organization's mind control.

Volunteers who care

AAWA has over 200 volunteers working from around the globe via the internet, and is expanding rapidly. At present, roughly 3 volunteers are joining AAWA every day. They are committed individuals, including Witnesses, former Witnesses, and even some individuals who have never been Witnesses but still want to help. AAWA volunteers give freely of their time, energy and skills in furtherance of AAWA's objectives. They are AAWA's most treasured resource, because without their hard work and personal sacrifice, AAWA would not be able to accomplish its work.

Raising awareness

AAWA has already had a small measure of success in spreading the word about harmful Watchtower practices online, but it has bigger ambitions. AAWA wants to spread its message throughout the world's media – reaching the largest possible audience. To that end, AAWA is already engaging professional PR companies who can assist in achieving coverage in newspapers and on TV and radio networks.

What AAWA needs

AAWA is very grateful to those who kindly donate money to its cause via its website – www.AAWA.co. However, what AAWA appreciates most of all is volunteers who are willing to help make its vision a reality. If you feel you are able to assist AAWA either financially or with your time and skills, please visit our website. We are glad to have you with us!
